The Journal for Procurement and Clinical Transplant Professionals

As a member of the transplant profession, you are aware that the rate of change in the procedures, pharmaceuticals and advances in the field is breathtaking. What resources does someone use to keep pace with these changes? How can you be sure that you have the latest information? The answer is simple: Progress in Transplantation.

Designed for You

Progress in Transplantation was initially designed for the procurement and clinical transplant professional. It rapidly grew to include physicians, administrators, researchers, nurses, pharmacists, social workers, as well as transplant coordinators. All of these groups use the Journal to gain vital information and new insights in the topics that are of specific value to their specific area of interest. Articles focus on issues that affect the daily practice of transplant coordinators and other health care professionals on the transplant team. Most articles are written by transplant coordinators, physicians and other transplant professionals.

Topics

Topics covered in the Journal include procurement issues, case studies/reports, international perspectives, outcomes with new immunosuppressants, pregnancy, living donation, non-heartbeating donors and many more. Ethics in transplantation, psychosocial issues, pediatric transplantation, OPO/transplant center management and other topical issues have been or are currently featured. Continuing education offerings toward recertification for nurses and transplant coordinators are an added value to readers.

Partnership

Progress in Transplantation has a current circulation of more than 3,000 transplant professionals across the United States, Canada and around the world. It began as the official scientific journal of the North American Transplant Coordinators Organization (NATCO). The Journal was recently adopted as a resource by the International Transplant Nurses Society (ITNS), the International Transplant Coordinators Society (ITCS), the Australasian Transplant Coordinators Association (ATCA), the United Kingdom Transplant Coordinators' Association (UKTCA), the Japanese Transplant Coordinators Organization (JATCO), the Canadian Association of Transplantation (CAT), the Association for Nurses Endorsing Transplantation (ANET) and the Society for Transplant Social Workers (STSW). The Journal's editor is Linda Ohler, RN, MSN, CCTC, and it is published by The InnoVision Group.
